The Deep Wash & Sentry

Field Log · Southern Canyon Descent & The Sentry Mesa

I. Into the Subterranean Shadow

Stepping down from the plateau into the floor of the Great Wash is like entering an immense stone cathedral. The sandstone bluffs rise sheer on either flank, shutting out the furnace wind and leaving only a cool, echoing dusk that smells of ancient mud and mineral salt. Water flowed here ten centuries ago; now only echoes remain.

CAIRN IV · SENTRY OF THE WASH

II. The Sentry of the Canyon

Guarding the choke point where the gorge narrows to fifty paces stands Cairn IV. Here the raiders rested their load; their campfire embers are cold, but their trail through the Terraces of the Jackal is unmistakable. They passed within touching distance of the sentinel stone, heading directly into the Whispering Chasm.

III. The Whispering Floor

Listen closely to the canyon walls. The wind descending from the northern rim forms acoustic vortices, producing spoken words in the sandstone. Silvia, consult Sheet 14B carefully: only the Law of the Canyon Walkers and the six relic cairns M-I-R-A-G-E will guide Hermes through the labyrinth.