The Whispering Gallery

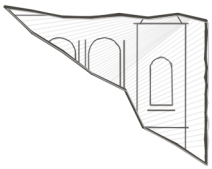

Under the narrow house a second stair goes down to a long hall with no corners. The Order laid it out the way Kepler drew the paths of the planets: two pins in the floor, a string of ten varas, and a pencil pulled tight around them. A whisper at one pin is heard at the other, clear as a bell. Nowhere else.

The pins are gone, but the string never stretched. Find where they stood. The raiders whisper at the east pin: stand at the west one, and listen. What you hear must be answered the way a mirror answers.

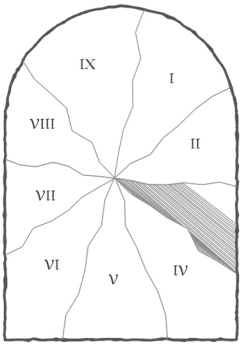

Two pins, one string, one pencil.
